

When you have a conversation with another person, you want to be able to learn and “hold onto” the important information. This helps you connect to other people and to build friendships. Using your hand can help you remember to ask for more complete details when talking about someone else’s ideas and experiences. Each finger reminds you of another question you can ask.

What? -the topic, the thing the other person did or wants to talk about

Who? - the people, animals, or creatures involved in the thing the other person wants to talk about

When? - the time that the thing other person wants to talk about will happen, happens, or did happen

Where?- the place that the thing the other person wants to talk about will happen, happens, or did happen

Why?- the reason the thing the other person wants to talk about happens, exists, or is important

How?- the way something happened or made the other person feel.
